Biden announces 2028 presidential run

Cuomo, Fetterman floated as potential running mate picks

Former President Joseph Rubbinit Biden announced Sunday he intends to once again seek election to the Oval Office in an unexpected move following what had appeared to be retirement during the 2024 election.

Biden told the AP he feels the current state of the White House is “freaking boinked” and that he seeks to bring order with a second term. He specified he feels that incumbent President Donald Trump has mishandled several key issues, naming immigration, inflation and Californication as areas to look at.

When asked how this new campaign will affect his political legacy, Biden responded, “This is the only political leg-I-see!” and slapped his own knee.

Biden suddenly got really serious.

“Now listen here, Jack,” he began. “I want to be the Jimmy Carter of the White House. And how I’m gonna do that...”

Following these comments, Biden curled up on the ground and fell asleep. AP correspondents reported that it was quite darling indeed.
